Heilongjiang Province Harbin Drug Rehabilitation Center, also called The Heilongjiang Province Women's Forced Labor Camp, is an interim “transformation station” set up as a provincial labor camp for the brainwashing of Falun Gong practitioners.

To force Falun Gong practitioners to renounce their belief, the guard forced practitioners to stay outside in the cold winter and to sit in an ice-cold washbasin or splash them with water while they sit on the cement floor, with their hands cuffed and their legs tied up. Practitioners have had their heads shaved. A basin is placed on practitioner's heads and inmates are ordered to strike it.

To prevent practitioners from speaking to one another, the police stuff old bags into their mouths and tape them shut. Many practitioners' mouths have become swollen, ulcerated and infected. Practitioners suspect that a substance found in the bags may be toxic. They also put rags soaked in urine into practitioners mouths. Then they beat them with brooms, kick them, or stomp on them.

Some practitioners, whose eyes and ears are taped over, are shocked with two electrical batons at the same time for over four hours. The longest session lasted eight and a half hours. Practitioners are denied any drinking water. One time they were denied water for three days. When the water is given, it is in the form of concentrated brine and forcibly poured into their mouths. Many practitioners throw up after ingesting the salt water.
